

FRESH DEEP SNOW DEMOS FOR SALE MEET SHELDON BYWATER

FRESH DEEP SNOW

Recent heavy snow storms in the West are presenting operators with challenges. Deep unsettled snow can be very deceptive to those who have not had experience in these conditions. Whether you are traveling by snow shoe or Sno-Cat®, you sink in far enough to get compaction which then gives you traction to move forward. In these conditions progress is slowed because you will sink down further than normal to maintain that compaction. If the machine starts sinking too much on one side or the other, back up and use the blade to fill in the low area and continue moving forward. In these conditions off-road travel can be especially challenging because unsettled snow does a very good job of disguising logs, stumps, rocks, and water. Spinning the tracks in these conditions can get the machine stuck quickly, so take it slow and do not try to force your way through, remember the trail behind you is packed so you should always be able to back up.

MEET SHELDON BYWATER

Sheldon Bywater started with Tucker Sno-Cat® Corporation in March of 2010 as a Mechanical Engineer in our Production Engineering Department. He attended Oregon Institute of Technology where he received his engineering degree and also did a six month internship with Leupold Optics. Sheldon was born in Las Vegas, Nevada, but grew up in Southern Oregon. Away from work he has been building his own C&C Plasma cutting table. Sheldon loves the great outdoors which offer him: shed hunting (see photo), archery and rifle hunting, back packing, and fishing. He is also interested in serious physical conditioning and bullet reloading.
